The gift of Luke

His name was Luke and he was perfect in every way.
He loved to dig holes in the yard, which led to hours of refilling, re-planting grass seed, and repeating.
He had such a cat obsession that he’d chase any feline at every chance and practically pull your arm off if he saw one passing by.
He needed constant encouragement to eat and would outright refuse to touch plain old dog food. As he grew older, he ate chicken, rice and mixed veggies each night, and just like one of the kids, he’d spit out his lima beans.
“He’s so pretty” everyone said when they saw him, and he’d arch his back and fluff up his tail, his way of saying “I know.”

Unlike other Border Collies, he never took to Frisbee or fetch, but he was always eager for a hike or a ride in the canoe wearing his life jacket.
He made it two months shy of 17 years old last Thanksgiving when we had to say goodbye.

One of the themes of this edition of Around Concord magazine is how to give gifts that can be appreciated over time. So many gifts can’t be purchased by clicking “add to cart” and waiting for an Amazon truck to arrive. Last year, Americans spent more than $850 billion over the holiday season.

Finding the right gifts for the ones we love can be a challenge, especially for those of us fortunate (or unfortunate) enough to have too much stuff.

In this issue, you’ll find suggestions of locally sourced gifts that support neighborhood businesses instead of billion-dollar corporations, as well as the Cappies, our reader choice awards of the best things the region has to offer. You’ll discover a program that plays Santa to seniors, where a simple pair of socks delivers joy. Plus, a full calendar of events that brighten the season even as daylight shortens.

Last year, our friend Luke found his way under our Christmas tree. We collected all the best photos of him and had Concord Photo Service turn the best ones into life-sized framed posters.

Let us guide you through life's financial events, now and in the future.

Annual Art & Bloom exhibit always brightens the mood

By GENA COHEN MOSES

The Concord Garden Club’s annual Art & Bloom exhibit is a Concord mid-winter tradition attracting art and flower lovers to enjoy creative floral arrangements paired with works of art. After a year’s hiatus, the Garden Club is returning with the 19th annual Art & Bloom exhibit in partnership with the League of New Hampshire Craftsmen.

Garden Club members and local floral professionals will create floral arrangements inspired by works of art and craft on display during the League’s winter exhibition: “Inspired Again.” The exhibit offers visitors a break from the snowy landscape with bright flowers and beautiful art.

Art & Bloom is free and open to the public at the League’s headquarters located at 49 S. Main St, Suite 100, in Concord. It will be open Jan. 20 from 1 to 6:30 p.m. and Jan. 21 and Jan. 22 from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

COVID protocols will be in place with proof of vaccination or masks required.

As the executive director of Five Rivers Conservation Trust, the Concord area’s nonprofit land trust, Liz Short knows the importance of conserving wild places, open spaces and working lands in local communities. So we asked Liz to tell us some of her favorite outdoor activities, and indoor treats, that she, her husband and their two daughters look forward to in the Concord area during the snowy season.

Winter market
We have loved going to the one at Cole Gardens and now the one at Eagle Square to get our fill of root veggies, local eggs, dairy, and fresh pastries.

White Park
White Park is the backyard that we don’t have. It’s the go-to spot for sledding and ice skating in the winter, made even better by the addition of the Merrimack Lodge skatehouse in recent years. Plus, we’ve enjoyed watching the Black Ice Pond Hockey Tournament for years. The kids especially enjoy the bonfire, big snow mounds for climbing and watching the energy of play close-up.

Outdoor hockey
More details on the annual 1883 Black Ice Pond Hockey Championships scheduled for January on page 66.

A night out
We like to grab a bite to eat at any of our favorite downtown Concord restaurants (like Revival Kitchen and Bar) and then enjoy a show at Capitol Center for the Arts. We’ve enjoyed many a Nutcracker performance there.

Out for a stroll
The Jim Hill River Walk is a fantastic spot for a kid-friendly snowshoe. Make sure to bring a thermos of hot cocoa to warm up while enjoying the scenic views along the banks of the Contoocook River. We’re thankful for the extensive network of trails in and around Concord that offer access to nature and winter adventures so close to home.

Sweatt Preserve, a 2-mile loop trail in Hopkinton, is owned and maintained by Five Rivers. It’s a beautiful spot for a winter walk. And the brook is a big hit, great for kid adventurers.

Fundraising efforts are inching closer to turning Concord into a destination for cross country skiing.

A winter wonderland for cross country skiing at city-owned Beaver Meadow Golf Course is close to reaching its first phase this season, but isn’t quite there.

The first step to bring top notch Nordic skiing to the city was to purchase a small snow groomer – a machine that could move snow around trails and break up icy spots. The fundraising goal was set at $150,000 to cover the cost of a new groomer.

The fundraising campaign to get the groomer on the snow this winter, including buying $25 “Ski the Beav” stickers, has reached about $80,000. That’s a healthy amount of money, but it’s $20,000 short of the total to trigger a $50,000 matching grant from the city of Concord.

“Someone could put us over the finish line tomorrow,” said Concord High School Nordic skiing coach Sam Evans-Brown. “If someone really wants to make this possible, they should email us.”

Without the new machine, grooming will be done again with the use of a snowmobile, which is less than ideal since it often gets stuck and doesn’t do the best job.

Former Concord High cross country coach and former city councilman Allan Hershlag on the Beaver Meadow cross country course.
As the plan progresses, phases two and three include snow-making equipment and lights for night skiing.

The project got its start a few years ago when the City’s Parks and Recreation department wanted to explore making Beaver Meadow a year-round destination for community recreation. This push led to an outdoor skating pond and indoor golf simulators, and an uptick in community use of the course for cross country skiing. After local ski teams started to use the trails more, attention quickly turned to improving the conditions.

Joe Ayotte, who coaches with the Concord Nordic Bill Koch Youth Ski League, moved the league’s regular meeting area to Beaver Meadow. The switch was a hit because parents could hang out in the clubhouse while their kids learned their skills on rolling terrain.

Concord High’s Nordic ski team started practicing at Beaver Meadow for similar reasons. Other trails, such as Memorial Field, were “pancake flat,” Evans-Brown said.

“Race courses have hills,” Evans-Brown said.

Additionally, Evans-Brown is continually looking for locations with good conditions that don’t require his skiers to travel far distances to practice.

Evans-Brown has his eyes on a used groomer located in New Hampshire that could be available at a lesser price, which could quickly spur the evolution of skiing at Beaver Meadow. Additional phases could be funded through grants and community development funds.

Once winter hits, the golf course offers a solid five kilometers of skiing, which is the perfect distance for Nordic races. In time, there is an opportunity to extend the trail network into nearby places like the Sewalls Falls recreation area to create something larger and special for the Concord community, Evans-Brown said.

“There’s really a lot of potential to string together a whole trail network,” Evans-Brown said. “But that’s a longer conversation.”

Donations can be made at sites.google.com/view/skithebeav, or by writing a check to the city of Concord with “Groomer” written in the memo line.

“Ski the Beav” stickers are currently available at Concord Parks and Recreation, Beaver Meadow Golf Course, and S&W Sports.

Seekers are all around us. They are seeking God, seeking freedom, seeking peace. “Chasing Eden: A Book of Seekers” (Bauhan Publishing) by Howard Mansfield is about this pursuit, about Americans seeking their Promised Land, their utopia out on the horizon — which by definition, is ever receding before us. In “Chasing Eden,” we meet a gathering of Americans – the Shakers in the twilight of their utopia; the Wampanoags confronting the Pilgrims; the God-besotted landscape painters who taught Americans that in wilderness was Eden; and 40,000 Africans newly freed from slavery granted 40 acres and a mule – only to be swiftly dispossessed. These and other seekers were on the road to find out, all united by their longing to find in America “a revolution of the spirit.”

‘The Green House’
Dan Lawton’s “The Green House” (Black Rose Writing) is the 2021 fiction winner of the New Hampshire Writer’s Project Literary Award.

The green house is more than a greenhouse.

Seven flowers, seven colors, seven meanings, and one 37-year-old secret – the green house is the keeper of it all. Its creator, Girard Remington, is a fragile elderly man whose life was shattered by a tragedy nearly four decades ago. And when tragedy strikes again – this time to his beloved wife, Miriam – he struggles to cope.

The pain of the two interwoven tragedies drives Girard to places of his psyche he desperately tries but is unable to escape. As the only place that offers him solace and tranquility, he turns to the green house as his savior from the regret and the agony and the heartache – and with it, he discovers the power behind it not even he knew existed. And if he listens closely enough, he may be offered the greatest miracle of all – hope for a second chance.

‘From the Beginning: A Cautionary Tale of an Everyday Family’

Author Wayne E. Held was born in Plymouth, Mass., in 1950, living his formative years in South Boston. His family moved to New Hampshire in 1962, where he graduated from Kingswood Regional High School. With the Vietnam War still in progress, Held enlisted in the U.S. Navy. He later returned to New Hampshire, settling in Hillsborough.

“From the Beginning” (Dorrance Publishing) is a novel based on actual events of Held’s life growing up in a family that faced abusive and financial hardships.

Character Nathan Anderson grows up in a family that expressed all the human emotions, including the seven deadly sins. They experienced love of family, matched with the financial and social struggles of raising one. There were rewards, disciplines, and abuses that weaved into the family fabric of those struggles.

‘Counter Culture: Claims, Convents, and a Circle of Global Citizens’

Eleanor Dunfey-Freiburger, the 2021 New Hampshire People’s Choice Award for nonfiction winner, recently published an account of the 100-year saga of her very large family – the Dunfeys. “Counter Culture: Claims, Convents, and a Circle of Global Citizens” (Peter E. Randall Publishing) portrays the story of a hard-working Irish-American pair, LeRoy “Roy” Dunfey and Catherine “Kate” Manning Dunfey and their 12 offspring – yes, a full dozen children. Kate and Roy wed in Lowell, Mass., along with 24 other couples at the rectory of St. Patrick parish. None could afford a church wedding. With little formal education or resources, they turned to their store of humor, entrepreneurial zest and spiritual roots and with those, collared the American dream. That dream began in 1915 with Dunfey’s orchestra, a luncheonette and a baby every two years through the Great Depression to the doorstep of World War II. Written by the youngest, Dunfey-Freiburger reveals the lasting influence her parents had on each of their children. After three sons returned from WWII, the family opened a clam stand in Hampton. The Dunfeys who had digested much political fare around the kitchen table in their early years, went on to make their mark in New Hampshire and national Democratic politics, while the four sisters entered religious life and became educators until each moved beyond that formal service. The Dunfey Family Corporation eventually became Omni International Hotels and, in 1968, purchased the then bankrupt historic Parker House. It became the base from which they responded to the many national and global crises of that era, and they did so by doing what they did best: Hospitality – welcoming and including people, diverse in age, economic status, gender, and race to gather around tables of conversation building trust and common ground, the roots of any sustainable community change.

‘Farm Girl’

Two years into college, bonded to a lover spiraling into addiction and 2,000 miles away from her heart’s home – a stretch of 40 certified-organic acres along the banks of the Connecticut River – Megan Baxter finds herself in starkly unfamiliar territory. She longs for the reassuring, cyclical clock of farming. It grounds her and reinforces her connection to something bigger. Hers is a profound devotion to Mother Earth: a tactile relationship with the life-giving powers of the soil. A form of worship.

And in the crucible of a rainy Portland winter, with her desire oscillating between a troubled boyfriend and the fertile fields of Vermont, Baxter chooses to embrace the future she was always meant to inhabit.

Baxter shares her stirring coming-of-age story in “Farm Girl: A Memoir” (Green Writers Press). Part drama, part ode, “Farm Girl” raises the earth up as a character and expresses Baxter’s deep love for the landscape – but she doesn’t paint it pretty; she describes it raw and rough with all the honesty and daydream of a girl imagining herself grown. It’s the story of redrawing the map of a life, of fixing a heart to 40 acres and of an outsider finding where she belongs.

Annalee dolls are known for their felt fabric, whimsical and mischievous faces, and creative positioning. Made for collectors and decorating around the home, Annalee fashioned her dolls from everyday life and the simpler times she knew in rural New Hampshire.
Behind the Smile: The Story of Annalee Thorndike is the first-ever illustrated biography of the legendary doll maker. Her story is a tale of self-sufficiency, live-free-or-die resiliency, and a life-long passion to create. Her dolls would define her life, and many say that each of her dolls is in some way a reflection of the woman herself and her playful personality.

Annalee Thorndike began making dolls as a child in Concord in the 1920s. Her passion to create was inspired by her artist mother and the many creative people she associated with, but at its core was her vivid imagination. She was blessed with dexterous fingers, a love of design and color, and a quicksilver temperament and curiosity. She was only four or five when she began playing with fabrics, lace, colored pencils, and paper to design dolls. Her dreams of making dolls would lead to a lifelong career.

The dolls she created are recognized as among the most collected and loved dolls everywhere. She would also, along with her husband Chip, build a successful company that would become both a tourist destination as well as one of the largest employers in New Hampshire.
Hampshire. Today that company continues to share her legacy with new generations of doll collectors.

Annalee dolls are known for their felt fabric, whimsical and mischievous faces, and creative positioning. Made for collectors and decorating around the home, Annalee fashioned her dolls from everyday life and the simpler times she knew in rural New Hampshire. They also reflect her wicked sense of humor. Her early dolls were about occupations, sports, and hobbies and then expanded to include her now-famous mice and elves. These little critters became a staple in the holiday and seasonal decorations for millions of people.

Behind the Smile: The Story of Annalee Thorndike is available at the Annalee Gift Shop, 339 Daniel Webster Highway, Meredith, or online at Annalee.com.

The Bottom Drops Out

Where once there were 32,000 Rhode Island Red chickens roaming around the Thorndike farm, the number eventually dwindled to a much, much smaller amount. In the early 1950s, the bottom fell out of the poultry business. Chip and Annalee Thorndike could no longer make a decent living selling hatchlings and eggs. Faced with mounting debt, they began looking for new ways to make a living. The couple would sell the additional farm they had purchased, keeping only their primary residence at Reservoir Road. Chip would take a part-time job at a knitting machine manufacturing company in Laconia while also tending to his remaining chickens and auto supply store.

It was not a happy, or warm, time for the Thorndikes. With no bank willing to lend them the money to finish some major home repairs, the family used a canvas tarp to cover an unfinished wall of the house during the winter months. It was out of this cold that the seeds of new business would sprout. Out of necessity, Annalee would return full-time to doll-making.

That humble piece of furniture, the kitchen table, has served as the incubus for many a business. Certainly it did for Annalee Dolls. It was at the sunlit kitchen table in the Thorndike's farmhouse where Annalee would begin her...
Starting in her childhood bedroom in Concord, Annalee Thorndike began designing artistic doll masterpieces made out of felt. She honed those skills throughout her life. Eventually, her family, including her husband Chip and sons Chuck and Town, would help make her designs known worldwide.

business in earnest. The operation expanded to the larger dining room table, then the living room, and then the upstairs, until dolls spilled out of every corner of the house. Annalee would make the dolls and Chip would find ways to sell them, delivering orders in the family Volkswagen. Annalee remembered: “It was quite a sight to see Chip barreling down the highway with a carload of dolls.” She also remembered having to clear off her materials from Chuck’s and Town’s beds before they could go to sleep at night. The house was full of dolls and doll parts.

It was Chip who would make another major contribution to the dolls. Annalee firmly believed her dolls should always be in a permanent position. To do this she had to find ways, sometimes extremely difficult, to sew them into those positions. Chip devised the internal metal frame that is still used in the dolls so that each doll could stay in place, just as his wife envisioned them.
Word of the petite dollmaker’s skill, and that of her enchanting dolls, slowly began to spread. It became necessary to hire a group of Meredith women to help in the production of the dolls. Both as homemakers and as friends who gathered around Annalee’s tables, the women filled the expanding order list. Annalee continued to design and make faces for new dolls and expected her assistants to pass rigorous production standards. She established an inspection process to make sure all dolls were made to her high expectations. Work was informal — a coffee klatch atmosphere — yet even in those early days Annalee established clear work procedures. She knew the most economical way to utilize fabric and worked and reworked her designs. She became a perfectionist where her dolls were concerned. And if the truth be known, she sometimes became so attached to a particular doll that she was reluctant to pronounce it “finished” and release it.

There were discouragements and disagreements, as there usually are in a small business — especially one going from a hobby into a full-fledged operation. Chip continued creating new accessories for the dolls, and developed ways to market them, often on a door-to-door basis. The Thorndikes made presents of many of their early dolls to businesses in the Lakes Region of New Hampshire, which displayed them on counters and in store windows, thus heightening their visibility. Friendships were established in those early years that Annalee and Chip would forever treasure.

Success and recognition came very slowly to the fledgling doll company. The company, thus the Thorndike family, struggled to make ends meet in those early years. But little by little, doll by doll, and with lots of persistence, Annalee dolls were finding their way in the marketplace.

Annalee focused on expanding her designs and collection of faces. She was continually experimenting with how to paint faces on felt, and stretching the felt, to make sure the faces and every expression looked just right. She also agonized over the positioning of her dolls. Chip’s wireframes gave Annalee more flexibility with her creations, but finding the right “position” for each doll became a painstaking process. If any company could be called family-oriented, this was certainly the case with making the early Annalee dolls. Sons Chuck and Town even joined the family business as mere kids to help tie the shoelaces and fit their mother’s ski boots and shoe gear to the many of the dolls’ feet. In 1955, Annalee and Chip incorporated the company as Christmas-themed Annalee dolls line the gift store in Meredith.
Annalee Mobilitee Dolls. The creative name perfectly referenced the type of doll as well as Annalee’s and Chip’s contributions to their design and construction.

The company’s dolls had their earliest success as promotional decorations and displays. Many department and specialty stores started featuring the dolls in their windows and sales displays. Jordan Marsh, then the largest department store in Boston, regularly featured the dolls. Annalee also returned to one of her earliest benefactors, the League of New Hampshire Craftsmen, which resold dolls for many years. Chip and Annalee often sought out partnerships with other companies to market the dolls, but most of the marketing was done directly one-on-one with various retailers from the Thorndike home. Through rough-and-tumble determination, by 1960, Annalee dolls were being sold in stores in 40 states in the United States, Puerto Rico, and Canada. The chicken farmers had become successful doll makers.

All About the Face

One of the most unique characteristics of an Annalee doll is its face. Impish features make the dolls immediately recognizable as “Annalee.” What is even more fascinating, though, is the company’s long tradition of creating not one, but many expressions for the doll put into the product line. This was Annalee’s clever way of making the dolls appear to be interacting with one another. She would set up elaborate scenes with multiple characters such as swimmers at a beach and skiers making their way down the mountain. She wanted people to see an expression and be reminded of certain people in their lives.

A range of one to 26 faces are used on any given doll. Certain items, because of the subject they represent or the activity they are engaged in, are limited to one expression. Armed with this knowledge, the savvy collector may seek out the multi-expressions as a way to further enhance the enjoyment of a particular doll. As Annalee put it, “there are expressions to fit almost any position you want to put them in.”

Those whimsical faces we’ve all come to know and love all started with Annalee herself. She painted her earliest faces to resemble her own cheery expression. (Some would say that all the faces are just the various moods of Annalee.) Annalee looked in a mirror to draw her own smiles, smirks, and grins. She would do this over and over again. She detailed each wrinkle, dimple, and squiggly brow hair in the mischievous expressions she made. The artwork was then fine-tuned and tweaked to create each mouse, elf, and animal face that was desired: freckles, whiskers, and a sparkle in the eye were added.

Annalee also looked beyond her own expressions to add more variety to her doll faces. She sought inspiration from her own children, Chuck and Town, as well as the people she worked with. She was an ardent student of people — their movements, their positions, their faces.
According to Gracie Blackey, who worked directly with Annalee for 10 years and currently serves as chief designer at Annalee Dolls, “Annalee studied herself in the mirror. She would go into the ladies’ room and draw herself in the mirror. Once I even goaded her into photocopying her face. She studied proportions, shapes, how the eyes looked, how the mouth looked. She looked at babies’ heads to watch how they grow and change. This helped develop the proportions for our dolls and their frameworks. She had a really good idea of what a face looked like. What was in the here and now.”

Annalee would eagerly devour magazines, newspapers, and greeting cards, studying the facial expression of the people in the photographs and drawings. She also was inspired by the artists of her time, such as Norman Rockwell, Dr. Seuss, Tasha Tudor, Trina Schart Hyman, and many more.

A little-known fact about Annalee is that she greatly admired and was inspired by the unique and exaggerated illustrations featured in Mad magazine, including the satirical cartoon character of Alfred E. Neuman, the boy with misaligned eyes and a gap-toothed smile. Annalee had piles of the magazine saved in her original design studio. When the studio was badly damaged by fire, one of Annalee’s first concerns was to see if her copies of Mad had been destroyed. Luckily for Annalee, one of the company’s employees had saved her magazines.

In the beginning, Annalee painstakingly painted her faces directly onto the felt used for each doll. After her dolls started becoming popular, a more efficient technique was needed to place faces on the dolls. With orders pouring into the Factory in the Woods, it became impossible for Annalee to hand paint each doll. Annalee and Chip turned to the silk-screen method and began printing the faces onto the felt in order to keep up with the demand for the dolls. All of the artwork used for each doll’s face or other markings, like dots on a dog or stripes on a zebra or any of her trademark smiles, is Annalee’s original hand-drawn work.

“The faces we use today are what Annalee actually approved,” Gracie Blackey said. “We can adapt them to give us something new. But they are all Annalee. There are actually millions of ways to present the faces due to her designs.” Whatever the expression, there’s something special and undeniably clever and whimsical in all of Annalee’s face designs. Most importantly, as Annalee always said, “If you smile someone else has got to smile back.” There’s magic in the smile of each and every one of the Annalee dolls.

Caitlin Cawley, home care consultant at Home Instead Senior Care in Manchester, packs gifts donated for seniors during the holidays.
By CASSIDY JENSEN

During the second winter of a pandemic that has increased isolation for many older people, a long-standing program that provides holiday gifts to seniors has taken on new significance.

As shoppers search for gifts for friends and family this holiday season, they can also buy a present for an elderly adult as part of the Be A Santa to a Senior program run by home care agency Home Instead and the Community Action Program for Merrimack and Belknap counties.

In December, delivery trucks bringing meals to about 300 homebound people will also play Santa Claus, bringing gifts purchased for each senior.

“Usually at the holidays we see a lot of Toys for Tots, toys for underprivileged kids, but often times older adults get forgotten in that mix,” said Caitlin Cawley, a home care consultant at Home Instead in Manchester. “Sometimes getting that one gift from the Be A Santa to a Senior program may be the only gift they’re going to get for the holidays.”

Much like initiatives that match poor kids with gifts, shoppers can choose an ornament with a senior’s first name and gift request from a Christmas tree at one of five locations, then drop an unwrapped gift back off at the tree with the ornament attached.

Gifts can be donated at John Whitaker Place at 30 Borough Road in Concord through Dec. 13. In Manchester, Chalifour’s and Coldwell Banker on Elm Street, State Farm on Kelley Street and St. George’s Greek Church on Hanover Street will also host trees.

The Community Action Program will gather the gifts together and hand them off to Meals on Wheels drivers for delivery to older homebound adults in Merrimack County. CAP Community Service Coordinator Michelle Beaudin remembers a woman one year who was particularly thrilled by a pair of warm, fuzzy socks.

“A lot of them get so excited, it means a lot to them. A lot of them don’t have any family, the driver is the only one they see,” Beaudin said.

The 300 or so seniors in Merrimack County who are matched with gifts through the program get food delivered via Meals on Wheels. These are people who could go hungry without those meals either because of mobility challenges, dementia or being unable to drive.

“A lot of them can’t do public transportation, a lot of them can’t get on the bus,” Beaudin said. “Delivering those meals means a lot for them.”

The gifts can be simple, and warm items like hats, gloves, scarves or blankets are appreciated. Coffee mugs, non-perishable snacks, and baking kits are other cozy gift options for the winter, while puzzle books can keep recipients entertained and stimulate their brains.

Since the pandemic started, isolation has increased for many people, but older adults were hit especially hard by the loss of social connection. Seniors are already more likely to experience loneliness, which can have consequences for cognitive decline and other health problems.

“The older adults we reach regardless of COVID are homebound, usually fairly lonely,” Cawley said.

This is the 14th year that Home Instead has organized the program, and every year Cawley said the organization gets calls from grateful gift recipients.

The home care agency sends caregivers to older adults to provide companionship, do daily tasks like cooking and housekeeping and assist those with Alzheimer’s and dementia.

Due to recent labor shortages in rehabs, long-term care facilities and hospitals, Home Instead has been seeing more clients with more serious health needs requesting home services while they wait for a spot at a facility to open up.

“We collaborate with the community to make sure that they can be comfortable in their home as long as possible, if that’s what they would like to do,” Cawley said.

Cawley has worked at the home care agency for more than 6 years. She was drawn to this work because of the important relationships she has always had with older people. Growing up, she was close with her great-grandmother.

“Now, as I’m getting older, my grandmother’s a big part of my life,” Cawley said. “It’s just something I’ve always been passionate about, bringing awareness to healthy aging issues and what older adults need.”

In New Hampshire, the percentage of the population above 65 is growing, and older adults are estimated to make up more than one-third of the residents by 2030.

Be a Santa to a Senior is one way to make sure older adults aren’t forgotten during the holidays, Cawley said.

“Especially with the state of the world right now with COVID and everything going on still, people are run down and they’re tired. The holiday season is starting to lift them up a little bit more,” she said.

HE’S PAYING IT FORWARD

By EILEEN O’GRADY

Clement Kigugu was on an airplane in the winter of 2006, preparing to land in the United States for the very first time when he realized just how challenging the language barrier was going to be.

Kigugu, who was on his way to the U.S. from Rwanda as an asylum seeker, spoke French, Kinyarwanda, Swahili, Kirundi and Lingala, but no English. So when the flight attendant handed him a form to fill out with his future U.S. address, he could only look at the paper with confusion. When the plane landed at the D.C. airport, his uncertainty only grew.

“I had thought it was only the flight attendant who didn’t understand French, but it seemed the whole airport didn’t as well,” Kigugu said, addressing an audience of nearly 200 people at the Concord Chamber of Commerce 102nd Annual Meeting gala in early November this year. “I thought the American people had conspired to pull a prank on me as a welcome to America. I had no idea how to ask for help. The only words I knew were ‘good morning’ and ‘how are you.’”

Today, Kigugu is the founder and executive director of Overcomers Refugee Services. Courtesy executive director of Overcomers Refugee Services, a resource center for Concord-area refugees and immigrants, that provides them with practical support, education and cultural orientation. They assist newcomers with applications for food stamps, Medicaid and housing, with resumé building and job interview prep. They also offer cultural orientation and conflict-resolution for people who fled countries torn apart by violence.

Kigugu already had a college degree and had a job running a non-profit that aided victims of genocide, war, and HIV in Rwanda, so the language barrier when he first arrived in the U.S. felt like a huge career setback.

“It’s putting you back again. The job, you start again from zero. You have to start learning the language, you have to have other people to help you while you know that you used to help other people,” Kigugu said. “That’s the real challenge, not only physically but also psychologically and emotionally. It really touched my life.”

Kigugu credits much of his current success to Second Start, a Concord alternative education organization that offers English language programs for adults, and the organization’s long-serving executive director, Jim Snodgrass.

Snodgrass, who recently retired from Second Start after 47 years, was named 2021 Citizen of the Year at the Chamber of Commerce gala. Kigugu spoke at the event about how Second Start gave him the English language skills he needed to be successful in New Hampshire, and the care that Snodgrass showed in wanting him to succeed.

“Jim is someone who is very near and dear to me,” Kigugu told the audience. “He continuously inspires me not to look down on myself but to maintain courage and self confidence. He took me to different places to speak, building my public speaking skills...Jim, thank you for your support and always believing in me.”

For Snodgrass, establishing English language and driving instruction programs for new Americans at Second Start was a way of giving people the skills to help them start their new lives in the U.S.

“You underestimate the language barrier,” Snodgrass said. “I mean if you can’t speak the language, you really do feel like a middle-schooler or elementary-schooler. You got to kind of depend on everybody else. That’s why I think what we do – we’re trying to develop the language skills – is a critical piece. I also think that driving is a critical piece, which is why we have the driving school.”

The number of English Language Learners at Second Start has grown exponentially over the last decade, and now make up the majority of the organization’s student population. When the school first launched in the 1970s, the ESL population consisted of a few students from Korea and Greece. In the 1990s the Balkan wars brought more refugees from Southeast Europe, and in 2001 the ESL population at the school almost doubled. Now, many of Second Start’s ESL learners are from central-African countries and Bhutan. Snodgrass led the creation of the New American Driving School in 2018, to serve the large population of new Americans who don’t have U.S. driving licenses.

“I’ve done this for a long time and I have seen a lot of success stories. It’s one of the things I think that keeps me going,” Snodgrass said. “Clement is definitely one of those stories that keeps me going.”

Snodgrass met Kigugu when he first arrived at Second Start as a student.

“I just saw him progress, really working hard on his English,” Snodgrass said. “I’m not sure I would have the ability to do that, so I admire that tremendously in him. And he’s always been a giving soul. I don’t know how to phrase it, but he’s for helping people. And I am too.”

On a recent Friday morning, Kigugu gazed around the sunny third-floor classroom of the Second Start building on Knight Street – the same room he took his first ever English language class. The tables were arranged in a U shape, and he pointed out the central back-row chair he used to sit in.

“When I saw the class for the first time it was good experience for me, because when I meet with other people from different places, who also struggled with the English like me,” Kigugu said. “It gave me courage.”

Kigugu worked in the early years, holding down two jobs at Concord Litho and Walmart, while also attending Second Start. When his wife and their six children joined him in the U.S. in 2008, balancing the responsibilities became tricky and he continued his studies at home with a volunteer tutor.

“I am a strong person due to the circumstance I passed through,” Kigugu said. “From all the things that I went through, it helps me to be more strong. It’s very, very stressful. But I was very strong to overcome.”

Snodgrass began inviting Kigugu to speak at local events like Rotary Club gatherings, where he spoke about his experience with Second Start. For Kigugu, it was a chance to network, to improve his English and public speaking skills— but says he viewed it as a chance to promote Second Start and give back to the organization that helped him.

Kigugu became a medical interpreter, then a caseworker, an employment specialist, a church pastor and ultimately founded Overcomers Refugee Services in 2013 when he saw the high need for services among new Americans. The organization now serves about 243 families.

“It’s daunting for people to come here and not know how anything works,” Snodgrass said, “And he’s been able to connect them with services, develop understandings about how it works in the United States, from applying for aid for certain things, or what you’re eligible for, to completing paperwork that you need. I think he’s provided a significant service.”

At Overcomers Refugee Services, Kigugu says, they follow the rule of three ‘E’s when thinking about how to serve their demographic: educate, empower and engage.

“Our goal is really to educate people, to teach them how to fish, so that way they can fish themselves and kind of keep receiving what we give them, but they can also do by themselves and help other people who come after them,” Kigugu said. “Like the Second Start did, to teach me English, so then also I can impact other people’s life.”

For Kigugu, who now sits on the Board of Directors at Second Start, it’s important that the families they serve feel the same way he does about paying it forward.

“I love to be part of the City of Concord and to feel like this is my home, and I have to contribute, I have to give back to what I receive. To do that, I also need my community to really feel that way.”

“I love to be part of the City of Concord and to feel like this is my home, and I have to contribute, I have to give back to what I receive. To do that, I also need my community to really feel that way.”

Not great at giving gifts?
Some ideas

By DAVID BROOKS

For those of us who are lousy at thinking up Christmas presents for family and friends, the pandemic has a silver lining: Finally, we have a good excuse.

Some stores have closed, we don’t feel safe shopping in person, supply chain snafus mean stuff isn’t available, the postal slowdown interferes with shipping – so here’s a gift card. Happy holidays!

Fair enough, but we don’t have to take refuge in the lamest of presents, those corporate gift cards that are as impersonal as cash but much less convenient. Here are some other thoughts about ways to approach your second pandemic Christmas, courtesy of my family’s worst present-giver. Which would be me.

Make a charity donation in their name

This is a great present in theory but has a big problem: There’s nothing to unwrap. The popularity of “unboxing” videos online shows that the best part of presents is opening them.

But there’s a work-around. Don’t print out the charity’s acknowledgment and shove it in an envelope. Learn a little origami – YouTube videos are perfect for this – and fold it into a swan or a beetle or, if you’re adventurous, a hexaflexagon. (Look it up; you’ll be glad you did.)

That will charm your loved one and be a lot more fun to open than a box covered in generic Santa paper. Plus, it makes you look smart.

If that’s too intimidating, many charities are aware of the need-something-to-unwrap problem and will let you bundle donations with a teddy bear or tote bag or branded trinket.

Buy local – a thing or an experience

You’ve heard this forever but the pandemic’s blow to local stores and stages has made “buy local” even more important.

If you want to buy a gift, don’t go to some gigantic e-commerce site named after a large river. A few minutes with Google will often find in-state crafters or manufacturers or distributors who could use a portion of your money.

Consider a donation to a locally based charity. But don’t just print out the charity’s acknowledgment and shove it in an envelope. Learn a little origami, and fold your gift into your new artwork. That will charm your loved one and be a lot more fun to open than any other present.

Better yet, shed the work-from-home habit and go check local stores. A small funky item bought from a store on Main Street will mean more than the same funky item tossed on your doorstep by a harassed delivery contractor desperate to make their daily quota.

It may be slightly more expensive because massive conglomerates squeeze costs in often unpleasant ways. We don’t see that unpleasantness when we click the “buy” button but they still exist and our shopping choices can help reduce them, which is a very Christmas-y thing to do. If you need a more self-centered reason, remember that local stores pay local taxes so that you don’t have to!

This applies for “experience” presents such as pre-purchased tickets or promises for an outing. Whether it’s all day at Santa’s Village, a Red River Theater showing followed by dinner downtown, a play at Hatbox Theater, dance lessons (I know you’re dying to learn the salsa) or a ski lift ticket, these are presents that show you care and also help New Hampshire folks.

Don’t be afraid to regift

As I said at the beginning, the pandemic is the perfect excuse for the present-buying-challenged.

You’ve finally got cover to unload the Uncle Floyd’s thingamajig from Christmas 2018 that you never wanted!

Make something yourself

As a kid I hated it when my folks gave this answer when I asked what they wanted for Christmas, and my grown daughter hates it from me even today. But it’s true.

It really does mean a lot when you give a loved one a drawing you made, or a corny poem you wrote or a little song you recorded, maybe a knitted scarf or a candle made from your earwax (OK, not that last one). Even if the creation is second-rate and amateurish, the time and thought that went into the gift is what counts.

Just make it clear that you won’t be offended if they don’t hang the picture in their living or wear the scarf to a job interview or turn your song into their ring tone. It was the thought that counts in the creation and it’s the thought that counts in their acceptance.

Food or drink

No explanation needed. I’ve found that monthly subscriptions for items people don’t explore much – cheese, ciders, sauces – are a hit.

And you can put the notice inside a hexaflexagon!

Consider giving the gift of a night out on the town. Concord has plenty of spots to eat and drink (you can also stop by Litherman’s Limited or Concord Craft and pick up a growler or a T-shirt!), or consider a gift certificate to a local theater like Hatbox, which has a season’s worth of shows lined up.

A small funky item bought from a store on Main Street will mean more than the same funky item tossed on your doorstep by a harassed delivery contractor desperate to make their daily quota.

‘Last Gas’

The Community Players of Concord presents a play about people from rural way-northern Maine. Nat Paradis is a Red Sox-loving part-time dad who manages Paradis’ Last Convenient Store, the last convenient place to get gas — or anything — before the Canadian border to the north and the North Maine Woods to the west. When an old flame returns to town, Nat gets a chance to rekindle a romance he gave up on years ago. But sparks fly as he’s forced to choose between new love and old.

The Lifespan of a Fact is a comedic yet gripping battle over facts versus truth. Jim Fingal is a fresh-out-of-Harvard fact-checker for a prominent but sinking New York magazine. John D’Agata is a talented writer with a transcendent essay about the suicide of a teenage boy — an essay that could save the magazine from collapse. Jim is assigned to fact-check D’Agata’s essay, but when discrepancies emerge, the two come head to head.

First Acts

Filling the teapot at the tap, turning on the burner—praise be for the day’s first acts requiring no imagination, no choices of consequence.
You can be half asleep and already a success at life, draw encouragement mastering the rituals of morning—parting the curtains, reuniting with your eyeglasses.

The looming hurdles of the day begin to loom possible.
the heavy head of the earth will not today spin off on its orbit without you.
The water boils and you know what to do, your cold feet anchored again to the map of the world.

Weaving the safety net

The safety net in Concord would be frayed without organizations such as the Friendly Kitchen, which fed Concord’s hungry. The Friendly Kitchen began in the food pantries operated by the St. Vincent de Paul Society. In the late 1970s, Polly Bell of St. Peter’s Church had volunteered in the pantries, but when she and a few others from the St. Vincent de Paul Society visited a program in Manchester, Bell was shocked to learn the number of truly hungry people who were lining up for a warm meal, prepared in a trailer kitchen and served out of the back.

Women from local Catholic churches met to discuss how to alleviate hunger in Concord, and Bell recalls that only she was willing to lead the effort. All Concord churches, regardless of denomination, were asked to serve a meal once a month; most churches immediately agreed, and meals first were served in 1980. The first night, three people came. During Concord’s Friendly Kitchen has never met the kind of organized opposition that plagued other localities.

The first year, the group served an average of four people, three times a week. Volunteer Jim Ceriello coordinated supplies and group schedules.

In 1982, the group combined with Riverbend Community Mental Health, then housed in the old Wonolancet Club building, where the Friendly Kitchen remained for seventeen years. The group gained financial stability, in part because Riverbend did not charge rent. Slowly, enough churches participated to allow the Friendly Kitchen to operate four nights a week, and then five. When Riverbend had a fire in 1998, the Friendly Kitchen served meals in South Church’s parking lot. When the kitchen needed renovation, both South Congregational Church and Sacred Heart Church let the Friendly Kitchen use their facility.

Concord’s Friendly Kitchen has never met the kind of organized opposition that plagued other localities. Director Hope Butterworth said that because the Friendly Kitchen worked with Riverbend for so long, often sharing clients, it was not perceived as threatening. Even when the Friendly Kitchen moved into larger quarters on Montgomery Street early in the 21st century, neighbors offered no opposition. Guests at the Friendly Kitchen have long felt quite at home, put at ease by the warmth of the many volunteers.

There, they find hockey rinks neatly segmented on the ice where players of all ages and skills compete in a range of divisions. The three-day event will also become home to hundreds of hockey fans, who come for the camaraderie, the food and the fireworks. They’ll also gather in the heated tents and around the bonfire.
